Canada is a constitutional monarchy with a parliamentary system of government modeled after that of Great Britain. The official head of state in Canada is Queen Elizabeth II of Britain, who is also Queen of Canada. The governor-general is the queen's personal representative in Canada and the official head of the Canadian parliament, although with very limited powers.

The federal parliament in Canada consists of the House of Commons and the Senate. The actual head of government is the prime minister, who is responsible for choosing a cabinet. The system is referred to as responsible government, which means that cabinet members sit in the parliament and are directly responsible to it, holding power only as long as a majority of the House of Commons shows confidence by voting with them.

The Canadian Senate has 102 members, appointed by the governor-general on the advice of the prime minister. Their actual function is advisory, although they may make minor changes in bills. The actual power resides in the House of Commons, the members of which are elected directly by the voters. General elections must be held at the end of every five years, but they may be conducted whenever issues require it, and most parliaments are dissolved before the end of the five-year term. When a government loses its majority support in a general election, a change of government occurs.

Persons sixty-five years and over already represent 13 percent of the total population in America, and by 2025 there will be 59 million elderly Americans, representing 21 percent of the population of the United States. Furthermore, the percentage of the population over age eighty-five will increase from about 1 percent currently to 5 percent in 2050. This population trend has been referred to as the graying of America.

To explain this demographic change, we must look to three factors. Fertility, mortality, and immigration in large part influence all demographic trends. The large number of children born after World War II will increase the pool of elderly between 2010 and 2030. The "baby boom" will have become the "senior boom" sixty-five years later.

Although the increase in the birth rate is the most dramatic factor, the decline in the death rate is also significant. Medical advances have influenced life expectancy. For example, whereas only 40 percent of those Americans born in 1900 had a life expectancy of sixty-five, today 80 percent are expected to reach the classic retirement age. The average male life span, now 71.4 years, is expected to increase to 73.3 by 2005. Among females, the life span is projected to increase from the current 78.3 years to 81.3 years by 2005.

In addition, immigration has contributed to the increasing number of elderly. After World War I, a massive immigration of young adults of child-bearing age occurred. Because the birth rates among this specialized population were very high, their children, now among the elderly, are a significant segment of the older population.

1. Which of the following would be the best title for the passage?

A - The Graying of America

C - Trends in Life Expectancy

B - Immigration Patterns in America D - Baby Boomers

2. The average life expectancy for an American woman today is

A - 71.4 years

C - 78.3 years

B - 73.3 years

D - 81.3 years

3. The underlined word "pool" refers to

A - a group of people

C - a negative attitude

B - a general direction

D - an increase in influence

4. The underlined word "increase" is opposite in meaning to

A - decline

C - medical advances

B - life expectancy

D - retirement age

5. The underlined word "their" refers to

A - the birth rates

B - young adults

C - this specialized population

D - the elderly

6. Choose the paragraph that explains what has influenced life expectancy.

B - To explain this demographic change, we must look to three ...

C - Persons sixty-five years and over already represent 13 percent of the total population in America ...

D - In addition, immigration has contributed to the increasing number of elderly ...

7. What does the author mean by the following statement?

Although the birth rate is the most dramatic factor, the decline in the death rate is also significant.

A - Both the increase in births and the decrease in deaths are significant.

B - The higher number of births is less significant than the decrease in deaths.

C - Lower birth rates and higher death rates have had dramatic results.

D - A significant change in the number of births has balanced the change in the death rates.

A - the "baby boom" after World War II

B - the immigration after World War 1

C - the improvements in health care

D - the decline in the birth rate among young Americans

9. It can be inferred from the passage that the word "gray" is a reference to

Text 3

In the United States today there are more than half a million criminals serving time in prison. Most prisoners are male high-school dropouts between the ages of 18 and 29. Even more shocking is the fact that the number and rate of imprisonment has more than doubled over the past twenty years, and the recidivism - that is, the rate for rearrest - is more than 60 percent.

Although the stated objective of most prison systems, on both federal and state levels, is to rehabilitate the inmates and reintegrate them into society, the systems themselves do not support such a goal. Prisons are usually geographically or psychologically isolated and terribly overcrowded. Even in the more enlightened prisons, only one-third of the inmates have vocational training opportunities or work release options.

If prisons are indeed to achieve the goal of rehabilitating offenders, then the prisons themselves will have to change. First, they will have to be smaller, housing no more than five hundred prisoners. Second, they will have to be built in or near population centers with community resources available for gradual reintegration into society. Finally, prison programs must be restructured to include work release and vocational and academic training that promises to carry over into the inmate's life after release. Models for such collaborative efforts between the criminal justice system and the community already exist in several hundred half-way houses throughout the country.

1. What is the author's main point?

- A - Prisons must be restructured if they are to accomplish the goal of rehabilitation.

B - Models for community collaboration have been successful.

C - Most of the criminals serving time in prison are high-school dropouts.

D - The criminal justice system must establish a better goal.

2. According to the author, how many prisoners are offered training or work release?

3. The underlined word "recidivism" refers to

A - all people who are imprisoned

B - people who return to prison after release

C - people who drop out of high school

D - people who have been in prison for a long time

C - the stated objective

B – prisons

D - federal and state levels

5. The underlined word "them" refers to

A - inmates

C - federal and state levels

B – criminals

D - prison systems

6. Choose the sentence that explains the rate of imprisonment over the past twenty years.

A - Even more shocking is the fact that the number and rate of imprisonment has more than doubled over the past twenty years, and the recidivism-that is, the rate for rearrest - is more than 60 percent.

B - In the United States today there are more than half a million criminals serving time in prison.

C - Most prisoners are male high-school dropouts between the ages of 18 and 29.

D - Prisons are usually geographically or psychologically isolated and terribly overcrowded.

7. What does the author mean by the statement?

Although the stated objective of most prison systems, on both federal and state levels, is to rehabilitate the inmates and reintegrate them into society, the systems themselves do not support such a goal.

A - Inmates in prisons do not participate in rehabilitation programs before they are reintegrated into society.

B - The goal of rehabilitation and reintegration into society is encouraged by the prison systems.

C - Prison systems do not promote rehabilitation and reintegration despite their goal.

D - Rehabilitation cannot be achieved by prisons without reintegration into society.

8. The author mentions all the following as necessary to prison reform, except for

Universally acclaimed as America's greatest playwright, Eugene O'Neill was born in 1888 in the heart of the theater district in New York City. As the son of an actor he had early exposure to the world of the theater. He attended Princeton University briefly in 1906, but returned to New York to work in a variety of jobs before joining the crew of a freighter as a seaman. Upon returning from voyages to South Africa and South America, he was hospitalized for six months to recuperate from tuberculosis. While he was recovering, he determined to write a play about his adventures on the sea.

He went to Harvard, where he wrote the one-act "Bound East for Cardiff". It was produced on Cape Cod by the Provincetown Players, an experimental theater group that was later to settle in the famous Greenwich Village theater district in New York City. The Players produced several more of his one-acts in the years between 1916-1920. With the full-length play "Beyond the Horizon", produced on Broadway in 1920, O'Neill's success was assured. The play won the Pulitzer prize for the best play of the year. O'Neill was to be awarded the prize again in 1922, 1928, and 1957 for "Anna Christie", "Strange Interlude", and "Long Day's Journey Into Night". In 1936, he was awarded the Nobel prize for literature.

O'Neill's plays, forty-five in all, cover a wide range of dramatic subjects, but several themes emerge, including the ambivalence of family relationships, the struggle between the sexes, the conflict between spiritual and material desires, and the vision of modern man as a victim of uncontrollable circumstances. Edgar Allan Poe is today regarded as one of the premier authors of horror stories, but he received very little recognition and almost no money for his stories while he lived. Twenty-five of his greatest stories were published in a collection called “Tales of the Grotesque and Arabesque”, which appeared in 1840, but at the time little notice was taken of it. Text 6

Jazz originated in the southern United States after the Civil War. It began as the musical expression of black people who had formerly been slaves, combining hymns, spirituals, and traditional work songs into a new form. The style was a blend of the rhythms brought to America by the Africans who were imported as slave labor and the popular music of the era that featured the ragtime piano. The term jazz itself is of obscure, and possibly nonmusical origin, but it was first used to describe this particular kind of musical expression in about 1915.

Improvisation has always been one of the primary elements of jazz. While one instrument, often the trumpet, plays the melody, another instrument, usually the clarinet, embellishes and invents compatible melodies around the original theme. Such improvisation is a test of the jazz musician's skill.

A jazz band commonly includes four to twelve musicians with a relatively large proportion of the group in the rhythm section. Customarily, there are a drummer, a bass player, and a pianist. Often there is also a banjo player or guitarist. In traditional jazz, the clarinet, trumpet, and trombone carry the melody, but in more modern jazz, the saxophone, violin, and flute may also be included in the melody section. Some jazz bands employ a blues singer.

Jazz first became popular outside the South in the 1920s, when jazz bands began to record, distribute, and even export their recordings to Europe. Since jazz is improvisational, it does not exist in the form of printed scores, and recorded performances were and still are the best way of preserving the music. A very basic library of recorded jazz would include work by such classic artists as Jelly Roll Morton, Louis Armstrong, Duke Ellington, Count Basie, and Billie Holiday. Theirs is probably America's most unique and most important contribution to the musical world, although there are a few contemporary artists who are keeping the tradition alive.

Alfred Hitchcock's precut scripts are legendary. More than any other director, Hitchcock insisted on working from precise and detailed plans. He often used storyboarding, a series of framed drawings of his shots, especially for those sequences that would later require complex editing. Some of the scripts from which he worked included as many as six hundred sketches. Every camera shot was considered, and nothing extraneous was included.

By the time he had finished such a detailed plan, Hitchcock knew the script so well that he rarely had to refer to it. He then assumed his favorite role, and one that he compared to that of a conductor directing an orchestra without the score. It was at this point that his intuition served as his guide.

Because of the widespread popularity of suspense films, Hitchcock was always trying to avoid cliches by inventing new ways to present a similar plot. He was successful in part because he varied the mood from one film to another, and even introduced variation in the middle of a scene within the same film.

Hitchcock admitted that he was less interested in the story itself than in the telling of it. He was a master at using and creating techniques that infused the scene with strong emotions. Some of his most effective sequences are both terrifying and funny, providing the viewer with a juxtaposition of contradictory sensations.

Independence Day in the United States is observed every year on the Fourth of July. Today, for most communities throughout the nation, the traditional celebration includes parades down the main streets, picnics with hot dogs and lemonade, and, of course, a fireworks display at night. In some towns across the country, however, special events are planned in honor of the annual occasion. In Bristol, Rhode Island, fire engine teams from communities throughout New England compete in a contest to squirt water from their fire hoses. Flagstaff, Arizona, hosts a huge three-day powwow, including a rodeo, for twenty Native American tribes. The annual Eskimo games with traditional kayak races are held in Kotzebue, Alaska. Two auto races are always scheduled for the Fourth, including a four-hundred-mile stock car event at the Daytona International Speedway in Daytona, Florida, and an annual auto race up the fourteen-thousand-foot precipice at Pike's Peak in Colorado.

Several small towns celebrate in other unique ways. Hannibal, Missouri, the hometown of Mark Twain, invites the children to participate in a fence-painting contest, reenacting a scene from Twain's novel "Tom Sawyer". Lititz, Pennsylvania, congregates in the Lititz Springs Park to light thousands of candles and arrange them in various shapes and images.

Collectibles have been a part of almost every culture since ancient times. Whereas some objects have been collected for their usefulness, others have been selected for their aesthetic beauty alone. In the United States, the kinds of collectibles currently popular range from traditional objects such as stamps, coins, rare books, and art to more recent items of interest like dolls, bottles, baseball cards, and comic books.

Interest in collectibles has increased enormously during the past decade, in part because some collectibles have demonstrated their value as investments. Especially during cycles of high inflation, investors try to purchase tangibles that will at least retain their current market values. In general, the most traditional collectibles will be sought because they have preserved their value over the years, there is an organized auction market for them, and they are most easily sold in the event that cash is needed. Some examples of the most stable collectibles are old masters, Chinese ceramics, stamps, coins, rare books, antique jewelry, silver, porcelain, art by well-known artists, autographs, and period furniture.

Other items of more recent interest include old phonograph records, old magazines, post-cards, baseball cards, art glass, dolls, classic cars, old bottles, and comic books. These relatively new kinds of collectibles may actually appreciate faster as short-term investments, but may not hold their value as long-term investments. Once a collectible has had its initial play, it appreciates at a fairly steady rate, supported by an increasing number of enthusiastic collectors competing for the limited supply of collectibles that become increasingly more difficult to locate.

1. What is the author's main point?

- A - Collectibles provide interesting information about culture.
- B - Collectibles are better than other types of investments.
- C - New types of collectibles appreciate more rapidly.

D - A variety of collectibles have become popular investments in the United States.

2. In comparing new collectibles with more traditional ones, the author observes that

Although he created the game of basketball at the YMCA in Springfield, Massachusetts, Dr. James A. Naismith was a Canadian. Working as a physical education instructor at the International YMCA, now Springfield College, Dr. Naismith noticed a lack of interest in exercise among students during the wintertime. The New England winters were fierce, and the students balked at participating in outdoor activities. Naismith determined that a fast-moving game that could be played indoors would fill a void after the baseball and football seasons had ended.

First he attempted to adapt outdoor games such as soccer and rugby to indoor play, but he soon found them unsuitable for confined areas. Finally, he determined that he would have to invent a game. In December of 1891, Dr. Naismith hung two old peach baskets at either end of the gymnasium at the school, and, using a soccer ball and nine players on each side, organized the first basketball game. The early rules allowed three points for each basket and made running with the ball a violation. Every time a goal was made, someone had to climb a ladder to retrieve the ball.

Nevertheless, the game became popular. In less than a year, basketball was being played in both the United States and Canada. Five years later, a championship tournament was staged in New York City, which was won by the Brooklyn Central YMCA.

The teams had already been reduced to seven players, and five became standard in the 1897 season. When basketball was introduced as a demonstration sport in the 1904 Olympic Games in St. Louis, it quickly spread throughout the world. “Mickey Mouse” was not Walt Disney's first successful cartoon creation, but he is certainly his most famous one. It was on a cross-country train trip from New York to California in 1927 that Disney first drew the mouse with the big ears. Supposedly, he took his inspiration from the tame field mice that used to scamper into his old studio in Kansas City. No one is quite sure why he dressed the mouse in the now-familiar shorts with two buttons and gave him the yellow shoes. But we do know that Disney had intended to call him Mortimer until his wife Lillian intervened and christened him Mickey Mouse.

Capitalizing on the interest in Charles Lindbergh, Disney planned Mickey's debut in the short cartoon with Minnie as a co-star. In the third short cartoon, “Steamboat Willie”, Mickey was whistling and singing through the miracle of the modern soundtrack. By the 1930s Mickey's image had circled the globe. He was a superstar at the height of his career.

Although he has received a few minor changes throughout his lifetime, most notably the addition of white gloves and the alterations to achieve the rounder forms of a more childish body, he has remained true to his nature since those first cartoons. Mickey is appealing because he is nice. He may get into trouble, but he takes it on the chin with a grin. He is both good-natured and resourceful. Perhaps that was Disney's own image of himself. Why else would he have insisted on doing Mickey's voice in all the cartoons for twenty years? When interviewed, he would say, "There is a lot of the mouse in me." And that mouse has remained one of the most pervasive images in American popular culture.

There are four basic types of competition in business that form a continuum from pure competition through monopolistic competition and oligopoly to monopoly. At one end of the continuum, pure competition results when every company has a similar product. Companies that deal in commodities such as wheat or corn are often involved in pure competition. In pure competition, it is often the ease and efficiency of distribution that influences purchase.

In contrast, in monopolistic competition, several companies may compete for the sale of items that may be substituted. The classic example of monopolistic competition is coffee and tea. If the price of one is perceived as too high, consumers may begin to purchase the other. Coupons and other discounts are often used as part of a marketing strategy to influence sales.

Oligopoly occurs when a few companies dominate the sales of a product or service. For example, only five airline carriers control more than 70 percent of all ticket sales in the United States. In oligopoly, serious competition is not considered desirable because it would result in reduced revenue for every company in the group. Although price wars do occur, in which all companies offer substantial savings to customers, a somewhat similar tendency to raise prices simultaneously is also usual.

Finally, monopoly occurs when only one firm sells the product. Some monopolies have been tolerated for producers of goods and services that have been considered basic or essential, including electricity and water. In these cases, it is government control, rather than competition, that protects and influences sales.

Although Henry Ford's name is closely associated with the concept of mass production, he should receive equal credit for introducing labor practices as early as 1913 that would be considered advanced even by today's standards. Safety measures were improved, and the working day was reduced to eight hours, compared with the ten- or twelve-hour day common at the time. In order to accommodate the shorter working day, the entire factory was converted from two to three shifts.

In addition, sick leaves as well as improved medical care for those injured on the job were instituted. The Ford Motor Company was one of the first factories to develop a technical school to train specialized skilled laborers and an English language school for immigrants. Some efforts were even made to hire the handicapped and provide jobs for former convicts.

The most widely acclaimed innovation was the five-dollar-a-day minimum wage that was offered in order to recruit and retain the best mechanics and to discourage the growth of labor unions. Ford explained the new wage policy in terms of efficiency and profit sharing. He also mentioned the fact that his employees would be able to purchase the automobiles that they produced in effect creating a market for the products. In order to qualify for the minimum wage, an employee had to establish a decent home and demonstrate good personal habits, including sobriety, thriftiness, industriousness, and dependability. Although some criticism was directed at Ford for involving himself too much in the personal lives of his employees, there can be no doubt that, at a time when immigrants were being taken advantage of in frightful ways, Henry Ford was helping many people to establish themselves in America.

- D – He had to be a sociable, resourceful and skilled worker.

7. What does the author mean by the following statement?

The increase in international business and in foreign investment has created a need for executives with knowledge of foreign languages and skills in cross-cultural communication. Americans, however, have not been well trained in either area and, consequently, have not enjoyed the same level of success in negotiation in an international arena as have their foreign counterparts.

Negotiating is the process of communicating back and forth for the purpose of reaching an agreement. It involves persuasion and compromise, but in order to participate in either one, the negotiators must understand the ways in which people are persuaded and how compromise is reached within the culture of the negotiation.

In many international business negotiations abroad, Americans are perceived as wealthy and impersonal. It often appears to the foreign negotiator that the American represents a large multimillion-dollar corporation that can afford to pay the price without bargaining further. The American negotiator's role becomes that of an impersonal purveyor of information and cash, an image that succeeds only in undermining the negotiation.

In studies of American negotiators abroad, several traits have been identified that may serve to confirm this stereotypical perception, while subverting the negotiator's position. Two traits in particular that cause cross-cultural misunderstanding are directness and impatience on the part of the American negotiator. Furthermore, American negotiators often insist on realizing short-term goals. Foreign negotiators, on the other hand, may value the relationship established between negotiators and may be willing to invest time in it for long-term benefits. In order to solidify the relationship, they may opt for indirect interactions without regard for the time involved in getting to know the other negotiator.

Clearly, perceptions and differences in values affect the outcomes of negotiations and the success of negotiators. For Americans to play a more effective role in international business negotiations, they must put forth more effort to improve cross-cultural understanding.

1. What is the author's main point?

- B - In studies of American negotiators abroad, several traits ...
- C - The increase in international business and in foreign investment...
- D - Negotiating is the process of communicating back and forth for the purpose of reaching an agreement ...

7. What does the author mean by the following statement?

Americans, however, have not been well trained in either area and, consequently, have not enjoyed the same level of success in negotiation in an international arena as have their foreign counterparts.

- A - Training is not available for Americans who must interact in international negotiations.
- B - Foreign businesspersons negotiate less effectively than Americans because of their training.
- C - Because their training is not as good, Americans are less successful as negotiators than their international counterparts.

Andrew Carnegie, known as the King of Steel, built the steel industry in the United States, and, in the process, became one of the wealthiest men in America. His success resulted in part from his ability to sell the product and in part from his policy of expanding during Carnegie believed that individuals should progress through hard work, but he also felt strongly that the wealthy should use their fortunes for the benefit of society. Among his more noteworthy contributions to society are those that bear his name, including the Carnegie Institute of Pittsburgh, which has a library, a museum of fine arts, and a museum of natural history. He also founded a school of technology that is now part of Carnegie-Mellon University. Ogden Nash was a poet, storyteller, humorist, and philosopher. Born in Rye, New York, and raised in Savannah, Georgia, he tried but failed to adapt himself to the academic, and later the business world. terrible wind that blew millions of tons of topsoil from 300,000 square miles in Kansas, Texas, Oklahoma, Colorado, and New Mexico. This was the Dust Bowl. It buried fences, fields, and homes. It choked cattle and sickened the people who stayed. Three hundred and fifty thousand settlers fled, many becoming part of a slow, sad caravan along Route 66 to California.

But wind and drought were not the only factors that combined to create the Dust Bowl. Only fifty years earlier, a carpet of buffalo grass had covered the Great Plains, protecting the soil and retaining the moisture in the ground. By the turn of the century, farmers had settled, homesteading in regions that had been used as range land. William Lyon Mackenzie King was a Canadian statesman and head of the Liberal Party who held the office of prime minister for a total of twenty-one years, longer than any public servant in the history of Canada. His father was a prominent judge, and his mother the daughter of William Lyon Mackenzie, leader of the rebellion of 1837 in Upper Canada. Greatly influenced by his famous grandfather, King was determined to serve his country in the role of reformer. At the age of sixty-five, Laura Ingalls Wilder began writing a series of novels for young people based on her early experiences on the American frontier. Born in the state of Wisconsin in 1867, she and her family were rugged pioneers. Seeking better farm land, they went by covered wagon to Missouri in 1869, then on to Kansas the next year, returning to Wisconsin in 1871, and traveling on to Minnesota and Iowa before settling permanently in South Dakota in 1879. Because of this constant moving, Wilder's early education took place sporadically in a succession of one-room schools. From age thirteen to sixteen, she attended school more regularly, although she never graduated.

At the age of eighteen, she married Almanzo James Wilder. They bought a small farm in the Ozarks, where they remained for the rest of their lives. Their only daughter, Rose, who had become a nationally known journalist, encouraged her mother to write. Serving as agent and editor, Rose negotiated with Harper's to publish her mother's first book, "Little House in the Big Woods". “The Pearl” by John Steinbeck is the retelling of a legend about a fisherman who finds a huge pearl, realizes that the discovery is destroying his life, and returns the pearl to the sea. It is told in a style so authentic that readers feel they are hearing the story from one of the villagers who knows all the characters. In spite of its apparent simplicity, however, there are several levels to appreciate in reading “The Pearl”.

Some critics have pointed out that the author was committed to ecology, and that this book was really his statement about the dangers of creating an imbalance in the natural environment. When the fisherman throws the pearl back into the sea, he is restoring the natural order. In fact, Steinbeck was a member of an expedition to explore marine life along the Gulf of California when he heard the legend of the "pearl of the world".

Other critics have suggested that Steinbeck's concern for the conditions of the working class was reflected in the relationships among the characters. The priest becomes interested in the poor fisherman's family after the pearl is found because he hopes to receive a donation that will enable him to improve his church. The doctor who has refused to treat the fisherman's baby in the past is solicitous when it becomes known that the fisherman has found a valuable pearl. An even more direct example of exploitation is the way that the pearl merchants take advantage of the fishermen in the village.

Finally, the work has been interpreted as an allegory of human desires, the vanity of material wealth, and the struggle between good and evil. Although the fisherman had dreamed that peace and happiness could be bought with the pearl, he realizes that these spiritual gifts are beyond price. They cannot be purchased.

Steinbeck himself writes in the introduction, "If this story is a parable, perhaps everyone takes his own meaning from it and reads his own life into it". Precisely this latitude for personal interpretation within the universal themes gives "The Pearl" such enduring appeal.

The practice of signing and numbering individual prints was introduced by James Abbott McNeill Whistler, the nineteenth-century artist best known for the painting of his mother, called “Arrangement in Grey and Black”, but known to most of us as “Whistler's Mother”.

Whistler's brother-in-law, Sir Francis Seymour Haden, a less well-known artist, had speculated that collectors might find prints more attractive if they knew that there were only a limited number of copies produced. By signing the work in pencil, an artist could guarantee and personalize each print.

As soon as Whistler and Haden began the practice of signing and numbering their prints, their work began to increase in value. When other artists noticed that the signed prints encouraged higher prices, they began copying the procedure.

Although most prints are signed on the right-hand side in the margin below the image, the placement of the signature is a matter of personal choice. Indeed, prints have been signed within the image, in any of the margins, or even on the reverse side of the print. Wherever the artist elects to sign it, a signed print is still valued above an unsigned one, even in the same edition.

B - If the signature is in the right-hand corner below the image the price of the print will be higher.
C - The print with the signature on its reverse side is more valuable.
D - There is no interdependence between the place of the artist's signature and the print's value. The matter is in the signature itself. If the print is signed it is more valuable.

6. Choose the paragraph that indicates where one might find an artist's signature on his work.

- A - Whistler's brother-in-law, Sir Francis Seymour Haden, ...
B - The practice of signing and numbering individual prints ...

Hachi: A Dog's Tale (or Hachiko: A Dog's Story outside the United States) is a 2009 American drama film based on the true story of the faithful Akita (акита-ину) Hachikō. It is a remake of the 1987 Japanese movie Hachi-kō.

Hachiko: A Dog's Story was directed by Lasse Hallström, written by Stephen P. Lindsey and starring Richard Gere, Joan Allen and Sarah Roemer. The soundtrack was written by a Polish composer Jan A.P. Kaczmarek.

In the film a college professor (Richard Gere) takes in an abandoned dog, Hachi, and they become inseparable friends. After the professor dies while away from home, the dog keeps vigil waiting for his master for nearly a decade.

The movie Hachiko: A Dog's Story is based on a true story that took place in Japan. In 1924, Hachikō was brought to Tokyo by his owner, Hidesaburo Ueno, a professor at the University of Tokyo. During his owner's life Hachikō saw him off from the front door and greeted him at the end of the day at the nearby Shibuya Station. The pair continued their daily routine until May 1925, when Professor Ueno didn't return on the usual train one evening. The professor had suffered a stroke at the university that day. He died and never returned to the train station where his friend was waiting.

Hachikō was given away after his master's death, but he escaped, showing up again and again at his old home. After time, Hachikō apparently realized that Professor Ueno no longer lived at the house. So he went to look for his master at the train station where he had accompanied him so many times before. Each day, the dog waited for Professor Ueno to return.

Realizing that Hachikō waited for his dead master, people's hearts were touched. They brought him food. This continued for almost ten years, with Hachikō appearing only in the evening, precisely when the train was due at the station. This dog that became a national sensation died on March 8, 1935, and was found on a street in Shibuya, not far from the place where he had been waiting for his master.

The people of Japan were so touched by this heartfelt example of a dog's devotion to his owner that a bronze statue in Hachikō's likeness was erected in 1934 at Shibuya Station in Tokyo. Eventually, Hachikō's legendary faithfulness became a national symbol of loyalty.

The first foreign premiere of Hachiko: A Dog's Story was on August 8, 2009, in Japan. In the United States the movie was first shown at the Seattle International Film Festival on June 13, 2009. Total foreign box office had reached $45,000,000 as of June 2010.
